As to Telephone Monopoly

During the debate in the House of Commons on W. F. McLean's proposed amendment to the railway bill to permit railway companies to permit the placing of telephones in their stations irrespective of any agreement such as has been made between the C. P. R. and the Bell Telephone Company, Mr. Oliver spoke as follows:—

Honourable report of Friday, June 26th.

MR. OLIVER. I would like to place before the House the condition in the district which I represent, as it exists in regard to telephone service, and as it will exist within a few months, if the agreement spoken of by the hon. member for East York stands. In the town in which I live and in the surrounding country, there is a telephone system, with about 400 phones. This system has been built up, partly by private enterprise, and partly by government assistance. There are three towns upon the system, and there are three radial lines with a fourth being built. In that country the railroad station is necessarily the center of business, and it is an absolute necessity to the satisfactory use of that system and to a satisfactory result for the money invested in it, that it should have connection with the railroad station. From Edmonton southward there is a succession of towns, varying from 200 to 5,000 inhabitants. Some of these have telephone systems and some have not. One, I think, has the Bell system; others have been proposed to put in municipal systems, and in other private enterprise has supplied the need. Recently the Bell Company has decided, I understand, to establish a long distance system from north to south of that district, a distance of about 350 miles, stringing all the towns along the railroad line and beyond the railroad line on its system. If that is done it simply means that our system, having some 300 phones, will be cut off from the railroad station, which is the central point from which and to which the system works. The other villages and towns which intended to put in a municipal system will be absolutely prevented from doing so; other towns where there are private or local companies, will be put out of business, just as they will be at Edmonton; and the Bell Telephone Company will be established in sole control of the telephone business in all that territory, simply by the force of this agreement which has been entered into between them and the railway company. In that country there is only one railroad company, and if the Bell Telephone Company secures a binding agreement with that company there will be only one telephone company. That means high rates, bad service and everything it ought not to mean, and does not need to mean, because while a telephone company is to a certain extent a monopoly, there is not the expense connected with its establishment to make it such a monopoly as cannot be broken by private enterprise and capital. Leave the Bell Telephone Company on its own footing, and there is a possibility of regulating it by competition or the danger of competition, but if you cut off every other telephone system from communication with the railroad, you simply entrench the Bell Telephone Company as a monopoly, and do the country that amount of damage. I do not wish to discuss the various points which have been raised by other members and which have been discussed very fully in the railway committee. There is no interference with any serious right or privilege of the railroad company. There is no interference that cannot be easily and adequately compensated by a charge fixed for the introduction of a phone into the railroad office; and when the whole matter is left under the control of an independent commission, certainly the railroad company does not stand to suffer in any degree.

attack upon the government here, but before it proceeded far it turned into an attack upon the government across the water. It would appear, from the tenor of the arguments, that there had not been any dealing between the two governments, resulting in the sale of Canadian produce. I want to put on record a fact that everybody in the House knows, that owing to the exactions of the minister and the department of agriculture and the government generally, there have been transactions amounting to millions of dollars between the Canadian people and the British government, transactions which could not have taken place but for the exactions of the department of agriculture, headed by the present minister, transactions which could not have taken place had not the British government been willing and anxious as well as able to buy from Canada and from Canadians. If the minister of agriculture is to be condemned on every occasion when the government in Britain buys some article it requires outside the limits of Canada, this parliament will be doing nothing else from now until it is finally dissolved, but passing resolutions of condemnation. The British government has to buy where it can buy best. It would not be fit to control the affairs of the empire if it did not do that. There can only be one reason why the British government has bought cattle outside of Canada on this occasion when their attention was brought to the fact that Canada had cattle to sell, and that reason was that they bought the kind of cattle they wanted at a lower price than Canada could furnish them. That fact has been brought out by the extract read by my hon. friend from Burrard (Mr. Macpherson). There is no doubt, cattle required for restocking the Bore farms are not the high grade cattle that are for sale in eastern Canada. A cheaper grade of cattle will answer the purpose, and are probably more acceptable. Cattle which come from a climate more similar to that to which they are to be sent; cattle which are lower in price than that at which they could be purchased here. Can they one find fault with either the British government or the government of Canada for such a transaction? For my part, it seems to me too bad that this House should be made an exhibition of before the country, by putting forward such a resolution, at such a time, and giving rise to such a debate as we have heard tonight.
